“The Colors of Grace”

By Joseph and Pamela Martin

on Maundy Thursday, April 9th
At 7:30PM

During Holy Week, the last days of Christ are often characterized with words like suffering and darkness. Taking a closer look, however, we can see suffering and darkness were, in fact, instruments of great joy and light.

From Thursday evening’s Passover meal through Friday’s dark hours on the cross, the light of Christ continued to illuminate the Truth. With intense clarity, the Teacher was showing us by example the greatest lessons of his ministry: service, obedience, humility, and forgiveness. Through Christ, the full spectrum of God’s grace is reflected in beautiful hues upon our lives.

In the suffering of this Holy Week, find joy. In its darkness, see Light. “For Light still shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it.” This is the power of Christ’s grace and the source of great joy.

MESSAGE FROM PASTOR ROBB ~ MARCH 2020

Lent: Giving... Taking... Connecting

One of the things my kids are really into right now is challenge videos on YouTube. Their favorite personalities take a break from reviewing toys, or showing tricks on video games, or whatever it is and face off against another YouTuber or their friends or family members in something as weird as they can think up. It could be eating strange foods, seeing who can stay in one room or a car for the longest, trying a silly game like who can eat the most marshmallows out of a swimming pool, or something else. The one my kids have been most excited about lately - and trying to get their mom and I to do - is the "say yes to whatever we say" challenge. (We do actually see through that one, believe it or not.) If 16 year old me could have seen this in the future, I would have been sure my friends and I would be rich because it's basically just broadcasting all the weird things you do when you're growing up to pass the time and be goofy with your friends. Now, admittedly, it makes me feel old cause the novelty wears out fast for me.

I did have a new way of relating to these videos when I was thinking about Lent this week, though. Lent, to me, is an example of a beautiful and powerful tradition of the church taking images and meaning from scripture to develop a new ongoing practice even though it's not found in the bible. I think it's really important we have a season when we consider our mortality, our failings, and our frailty helps us have a good perspective about life in general - especially as it is also tied to the hope of transformation, perfect weakness, and new life in the anticipated death and resurrection of Jesus. Most of us are probably familiar with the Lenten practices of giving something up or taking something up as ways people can acknowledge things that have undue power over them or things they leave undone, and try to put more focus on God and living a life of the Kingdom. I do think there's a temptation for these practices to end up like challenges, though. We might fall into giving up chocolate, or meat, or Facebook - or doing a service project, or having a prayer journal, or giving to a cause to show ourselves, or our friends, family, or church, or even God that we have the will to do this unusual thing as a mark of our faith commitment.

MESSAGE FROM PASTOR ROBB ~ MARCH 2020

I don't mention this to be specifically critical of anyone doing any of those things. No matter what, it's good to have a way of recognizing the patterns we stuck in that keep us from doing things we should or get us in a rut of things we shouldn't - and then interrupt them with God's help and insight. Hopefully it will lead not just to a temporary practice, but new ways of engaging in our normal rhythms. Hopefully it gives us a relational experience to go through with God and others, and not just a thing to try to prove ourselves - especially to God who's love doesn't need that or want that anyway. But I think it's worth recognizing how in this season we might think giving something up or taking something up is something to accomplish as an end in itself, when the point of these practices should maybe be something else entirely. I will fully admit that I have often operated in such a mindset when I've done Lenten practices - thinking about having discipline within myself, or doing something for God. Neither or which is implicitly bad, but I'm beginning to think it also wasn't the point.

One of our Ash Wednesday scriptures this year was Isaiah 58, which asks a question that actually comes up in some form or another a decent amount from God, "is this not the fast I have chosen?" It's basically, "you've got all these interesting practices to be faithful, so what's the point?" And God always answers that the point is not to be disciplined individuals, or even to love God so much we do difficult things. The point is to create a life of shared dignity, security, and wholeness for all of God's creation. (Check out the verses, there's lots of good ideas.) And that makes sense for the other aspects of Lent, too. Remembering we're dust and to dust we will return encourages a common sense of humanity by seeing deeper than all the accumulation of life we can pretend makes us different. Being honest about our own failings and frailties hopefully helps us be less judgmental and more gracious when we are prone to noticing those of others. So as any of us try to give something up or take something up this Lent, let's all try to do so in spirit of commonality and connectivity God has chosen for us - not as solo challengers. If we give something up, maybe we're able to notice that some people don't have it in the first place to choose to take a break. If we take something up, maybe we find a way to experience the world from another perspective we're prone to discount. (We should also make sure we don't do this in a token way, or as experiential tourists - hopefully our chance and connecting with someone else's experience develops enough respect for them that this becomes the first step in a long, shared journey, not a temporary detour just for ourselves.) We can connect with each other in sharing and supporting our attempts, with more of God's children by stretching ourselves to seek commonality beyond our comfort zone, and with God by joining in what God is always doing - a Lent that's not a challenge for us, but a transformative camaraderie for all.

~ Pastor Robb
