Eleventh Sunday in Ordinary Time - 13th June 2021

He explained everything to his disciples when they were alone

I remember Fr Tony Ford, one of our lecturers at Wonersh, who would frequently remind us that anything written in black and white and in straight lines was unlikely to capture the whole truth. The philosopher Ludwig Wittgenstein has something similar to say about how the most important things can often only be indicated (shown). This is something that those who engage with poetry, music and art also appreciate – that these forms will often convey something far deeper, far more real, than a simple factual description.

Jesus taught in parables. The gospels tell us that he did, and they report many of the ones he told. It was undoubtedly part of his style. But not everyone understood them. He will have known this and his persistence reflects his conviction that this was the best way of getting through to them.

The ending of the Gospel today suggests that the parable was the opening of a conversation with Jesus, not its conclusion or total content: he would unpack them with his disciples when they were alone.

The same holds true for us. The parables, and indeed the scriptures as a whole, are the starting point for the Lord's conversation with us. It is only when we sit with them in quiet prayer, or listen attentively to them proclaimed in the liturgy that we start to speak heart to heart. The recognition of this is one of the reasons why the practice of lectio divina has come to the fore in our spiritual tradition in recent decades. It is that place in which the Lord helps us to understand the revelation of himself, the mystery of the Father's love, and the response to which he calls us.

We are supposed to be both enlightened and puzzled by the parables, but most importantly to accept them as an invitation to come into that deeper friendship in which their meaning for us and for our lives will be unfolded.
